How Brownfield Leaders are Responding to the Energy Transition
By repurposing brownfields for non-fossil fuel energy projects, communities can reclaim their underutilized sites and transform them into hubs of clean energy generation. In this discussion, you will hear about how new programs, dynamic strategies, and cutting-edge projects are driving forward the energy transition and community revitalization. From initial assessments of properties to decisions about siting, you’ll come away understanding the benefits of using brownfields in our energy transition - as opportunities to address environmental concerns, foster sustainable economic development, and facilitate the progression towards a greener future.
Moderator: Michael Taylor, President of Vita Nuova
- Jon Grosshans | Senior Advisor, US EPA Office of Policy
